What It Means to be A Black Man Description:

What It Means to be A Black Man is a thought-provoking interactive lecture presentation and audience-based Q & A. This powerful lecture was born from a poem, written by multi-award winning international producer, choreographer, and African American, Sean McLeod more than 13 years ago. The poem chronicles the challenges and triumphs of overcoming the realities of being Black and male in America.

Years later, the poem evolved into song. Its musical interpretation is a soul stiring and inspiring expression, translating the poem's words into a musical offering that allows anyone, regardless of their gender or culture, to understand if only for a moment the challenges of being a Black man in this country.

Sean McLeod with Dorothy Gilliam, famous Washington Post & Civil Rights journalist.

Mr. McLeod explores with the audience the stereotypical, social, and cultural realities of America, and provides tangible examples of how to overcome many of life's challenges. Regardless of ethnicity, age, gender, or financial status, Mr. McLeod helps everyone with challenge to see their potential for success, and never allows them to settle on being passive victims of circumstance. Ultimately, Mr. McLeod inspires all in attendance to become engaged motivators themselves, as we all pave the way towards success, happiness and peace.

Sean McLeod inspires thousands of people a year.
